Mom and I lived in a small apartment above Mrs Wilson's garage. Mrs Wilson had a no-pets rule, but I knew she used to keep a dog with her husband, who had passed away a few years ago. Anyway, I was determined to ask if I could have a dog. Mom gave me the go-ahead, but 71 me not to get my hopes up.

One day, I walked up to Mrs Wilson, when she was sitting on the front terrace (露台). I showed her the picture of Sweet Potato, a lovey dog from a shelter (收容所). She refused right away, saying our apartment was too small.

When I was finally old enough to be a volunteer at the shelter, I started helping walk the dogs there. I took them on hikes around the lake and to our neighborhood.

Days later, I found a(n) 72 from Mrs Wilson on our door. She asked us to pay the last month's rent (房租) and leave. She thought I 73 the no-pets rule, probably because she saw me walking dogs. Mom tried to talk to her, but she wouldn't listen.

I knew I had to 74 this.

When I was walking Sweet Potato the next day, we passed by Mrs Wilson on the terrace.

I said, "This is Sweet Potato," when Sweet Potato rushed to her. She stroked (抚摸) the dog but said, "You shouldn't have brought it home."

"But I didn't 75 any dogs," I showed the shelter's page on my phone to her.

"You didn't bring home any dogs?" Mrs Wilson asked, looking at the screen.

"That's right," I said. "But I think Sweet Potato 76 here. You could keep it!"

"Keeping dogs is a lot of work," Mrs Wilson replied, her eyes still on Sweet Potato.

"I'll walk the dog and feed it."

"So we'd work together?"

"Yes, madam. So, you're considering it?" I asked.

Mrs Wilson picked up Sweet Potato and kissed its forehead, saying "Yes. It looks just like the one Jack and I had."

I was so happy that I could help bring a little joy into Mrs Wilson's life. It turns out that a little determination and the love of a dog could work wonders.
